Daring Deliverance from Dunkirk

Tens of thousands of our brave British Expeditionary Forces (B.E.F) have been rescued from Dunkirk and saved from the bombing on the continent.

Over 300,000 brave soldiers have finally been evacuated from the beaches of Dunkirk, where many have been stranded for days under constant attack from determined German bombs and gunfire.

After the German army broke through a weak spot in the Allied forces troops, our brave boys were surrounded and pushed back towards the foreign coast.

Vice-Admiral Ramsey organised the rescue mission- codenamed Operation Dynamo by the government- and sent several Destroyers.

Once it was discovered that these enormous ships could not get close enough to the beach, a plea was sent out to local civilians for any sea-worthy vessels.

An assortment of 'little ships' – the strangest armada even seen- were dispatched towards France: long, wide barges; well-used pleasure steamers; privately owned fishing boats and ex-lifeboats.

Despite their strange appearance, these little ships were instrumental in the success of the perilous mission and were greatly appreciated.

The many injured and those suffering from physical and mental exhausted troops owe a great debt to the civilians who came to their aid- especially those who made the ultimate sacrifice.
